

Subject: contact

From: Sonia Chen <sonia@linzhi.io>

Date: 2/21/2019, 4:43 AM

To: hudson@ethereum.org

Hudson,

it's me again 😊

I got used to no-answer by now but I assume the mails are read.

When we released a statement via coindesk, you did listen.

I looked up your first message:

--- Hudson wrote:

Why hasn't Linzhi reached out to any core developers or the Ethereum Foundation before releasing your statement today?

You can contact me and I can put you in touch with who you need to speak with depending.

It seems you are not in tune with the Ethereum community or the anti-ProgPoW people if you assumed no one would listen and didn't even make an attempt.

To be honest your statement seems like a marketing ploy.

I need you to put me in touch with the Ethereum Foundation Legal Counsel, please.

Our entire "activism" around ProgPoW is completely misunderstood, I'm assuming out of incompetence and lack of interest, not with malicious intent.

Everything is different from what the official story is:

ProgPoW is a joint effort of 10-15 people at nvidia, amd and intel to fight chinese supremacy in crypto. Vitalik kickstarted this effort without realizing (I would assume) that Nvidia would have no hesitation lying to him and is simply trying to control and co-opt mining. Core Scientific has a special deal with Nvidia that will give them undue advantage over independent miners. Core Scientific's only customer to-date is the Coingeek/CSW/nChain group, which mostly deals with gambling, racketeering, money laundering, etc.

None of this can be proven, and most may not be provable ever.

That doesn't make it less of a "conspiracy theory" than simply saying all those bad things don't exist.

Of course some of our story may be wrong! But at least we are trying to find the truth with as much scrutiny as possible, it seems many others don't care.

We will continue to point out to individual ETH developers, as well as the Ethereum Foundation, what kind of partners they are doing business with, and we will continue to find out more, even already out of self-protection because we have to decide who to do business with and who not (we were offered up to 70 million USD yesterday for secret ProgPoW chips! We will never do business with the mafia)

From Bitcoin Cash events last year, it's pretty clear that you want to stop the intrusion of bad faith actors into your community as early as possible. You may want to talk to Amaury Sechet from Bitcoin Cash about this.

Don't say later we "haven't reached out" or you "would have helped" when in fact that is not happening.
You want to avoid that there is a big article in coindesk, bloomberg, etc first that talks about how Coingeek/CSW took over ETH...

Can you please put me in touch with Tju Liang Chua in Singapore?

I tried to reach him but he doesn't reply... 😊

Cheers,

Sonia